Dear Mr. Guenther,

I'm writing you regarding the University's search for a head varsity coach for its football program. With eight years of coaching experience, mostly at the professional level, I think I've gained a unique perspective on the game of football that would lead me to NCAA coaching success.

My tenure coaching various teams over the past years has provided me with invaluable experience managing team budgets, overseeing player development, and establishing a clear path of improvement to meet our goals. My teams have a history of being highly successful and I take pride in that. Beyond on- field victories, I've been highly effective in recruiting top players and gaining fan support. While my previous appointments haven't required me to speak for the programs in a representative role, I believe that it's a responsibility I could easily take on.

My coaching history is unconventional, and I think that may be just what the Illini need to turn their program around. If it should become important what others think of my potential, please contact these people:
